SANTO DOMINGO CITY AND HARBOR.

The capital of San Domingo, from which President Morales fled last week, has eagerly awaited definite news as to the plans of the former President. Many of the inhabitants fear that an attack will be made upon the city, by the insurgent forces, and an attempt made to establish a new government.

Puzzles Him to Know "Where He's At"-Resents Intrusion of Actors on Quiet.

When John W. Witz, a street car conductor, residing at No. 1728 Onlo avenue, after a very happy New Year's morning. walked into the darkened Century Theater while the first act of "The Pit" was on at yesterday's matinee, the transition from daylight to darkness was more than he could comprehend.

"Where am 12" asked the bewildered Mr. Witz in tones which made one think of a stage whisper because they were so very much louder.

An accommodating usher informed him credulous, however, and began a line of vociferous argument which was notable chiefly for its unkind tenor concerning everybody who crossed his vision. His wife, who accompanied him, tried in vain to quiet her talkative spouse, but with sount success until, the restful twilight of the theater induced a somnolence which lasted until the curtain was rung down on the first act.

When the lights were turned on at the end of the first act Wilz's scattered wits collected themselves sufficiently for him to realize that he was in a theater instead of in his downy couch, and his indignation rose higher each moment the disappointment was borne in upon his unquiet soul They were taken before Judge Taulbee. "Kunck his block off."

Witz was impervious to criticism and determined that he should exercise the precognitive exclusively. His indignation in creased tenfold when the second act was on and he realized that his ventuings for est and quiet were to be made naught by the distracting lines of the actors. From purposeless asides, addressed to no one in particular, he rose to more ambitious heights of vituperation directed personally and pointedly at the well meaning actors on the stage, broadly in sinuating that their room was more desiruble than their company and inviting them more emphatically than politely to go hence and "give ush a ressh." All the coaxings and pleadings of his wife to leave the theater with her were fruitiese, likewise all the hisses and murderous looks directed at him by his an novel neighbors from every part of the house. Administration's Chief Danger Lies in Possibility of Dominican Congress Repudiating Pending Treaty.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL Washington, Jan. 1-Advices received at the Navy Department from Santo Domingo are to the effect that the Nashville and Scorpion are at Puerto Plata, under the command of Commander W. H. Sutherland, and that notice has been promptly served upon the Dominican gunboat, the Independencia, that she would not be allowed to bombard the town, and if she desired to fight she would have to sail beyond the limits of the town

122 tone displacement, while that of the Nashville is 1,370, and that of the Scorpion 80 tons, there is no doubt entertained here that upon the advice of the commander of such ships, the Independencia would readily forego the bombarding of the town of Purto Plata. It is pointed out at the Navy Department that a precedent for such action on the part of the United States war vessels was set by both Commander Dillingham and Admiral Sigsbee, who, upon separate occasions warned warring factions in the fight they would have to go outside the settled part of the mand to do it. Each of these warnings was given at Monte Christi, and it is taken that to-day's warning was exactly along the same lines. TRYING PROTECTORATE here to mean that the United States are protect the American collection of Dominian customs, regardless of what Morales, Caceres or anyone eise to at the head of the Government. in fact, the action is interpreted here as meaning that this Government is willing to assist in the dewnfall of Morales, just as once it was in favor of uphobiing him, provided that its action will tend to confirm this American collection of customs. The attitude of the administra him, but would let the better man win. Later, it was acknowledged that there's . was fully as much in favor of the "temporary arrangement" as Morales had ever been. Therefore, according to the interpretation given here, when the independencia threatened to do anything which might tend to disturb the American administration of the Dominican customs, it has wromptly warned off, although it represented the Morales party.

ADMINISTRATION IN CORNER There is some approhension here that the administration will be more emberrassed than at present should the Dominican Congress repudiate the pending freaty between its country and the United States and ask for the restoration of the million or more dollars deposited to its endit in New York According to the agreement, variously styled as a "temporary arrangement by President Roosevelt and a "modus vivendi" by President Morales, this money, in the event of the fullure of the treaty, is subject to call by the Dominican Congress for distribution among the fereign creditors in any manner which the Angress may deem just. Since the President stated in his message that the United States had undertaken the collection and distursement of the Dominican customs receipts only that t might stave off foreign intervention. the question has arisen whether he can afford to permit the Dominican Congress to have unquestioned control of this large sum of money, and whether, in case it is unwisely or unjustly distributed, there will not remain a moral obligation on the part of the United States to Staly, Germany, Belgium and other foreign cred
